Achieving Victory on the Battlefield of Immortality

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—“The awful Shadow of the unseen power of universal history, floats, though unseen, among us.”

The assassin walked up, took aim and pulled the trigger. Nothing. He pulled the trigger again. Nothing. The former President, now Vice-President, was unhurt. “I have stared into the face of Death, and Death has turned his face away from mine.” Had a miracle occurred?

The shocked nation for a moment stood still. Did the people sleep through the night, or did the nation dream of what it might be, once again? Did it remember itself throughout the night? The next day, people gathered all over Argentina by the tens of thousands. A million gathered in Buenos Aires. The talk was of unity against the madness of political violence. Something more than the life of the Vice-President, so surely about to be lost only hours earlier, had not only been saved; a nation’s optimism had suddenly, “in a twinkling of an eye,” been re-born.

There had been a time, only seven years earlier, when then-President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner had declared, to “All of us, Argentine workers, who are now celebrating together with our fellow countrymen and countrywomen this historical landmark ... the full incorporation into the Argentine Energy System of the Third Argentine Nuclear Power Plant ... I want to say that all the work for this nuclear plant was done by Argentine people, Argentine brains, Argentine labor, because, you know something? We, the Argentine people, have begun once again to go down a path that we had abandoned....” She then recalled her deceased husband, Nestor Kirchner, also the President of Argentina from 2003-2007. Cristina Fernández de Kirchner had succeeded him to govern the nation for eight years. “Today, we are reclaiming that role by fully opening this plant but, mainly, as a result of the decision made by President Nestor Kirchner in 2004, when he launched the Argentine Nuclear Program, which ensured the continuation of this plant, Atucha II...”

The moment of human optimism alive in Argentina today, is also alive, if dormant, not only elsewhere, but everywhere. China has it. Russia has it. India has it. All those that other nations view as adversaries, have it, as do they. The Argentine case forcefully proves, moreover, that optimism abides, as a potential, in even the most lethal and tragic of immediate futures, such as our own. Optimism is universal. This, as an actualized potential, can be the future of the world tomorrow, but only if a Gideon’s army of philosophers, “lovers of wisdom,” deploys into this moment with the greatest energy to mobilize the better angels of the nature of the human race. This means a return to technological optimism, and the creation of a world economic platform deploying James Webb Telescope-caliber technologies, such as laser machine-tools, into the workplaces of the United States, China, Russia, India, and South Africa, among other nations. That has been the task and purpose of the Schiller Institute conferences on creating a New World Security and Development Architecture, including the upcoming conference of Saturday, September 10, and Sunday, September 11.

This Gideon’s army’s military manuals were written by poets—Dante, and Shakespeare, and Schiller, and Tagore. Imagination is the weapon of choice for this army, to inspire others to inspire humanity as a whole, that we may not only survive this, the greatest crisis in all world history, but prosper as we resolve it. This new army of thinkers must, to win its own impending Battle of Marathon with today’s “Great Reset” modern-day Persian host, use methods opposite to those of the dying Anglosphere—famine, war, pandemics, and the pestilence of usury, the pestilence of cultural pessimism. The presentation, “Gandhi’s Vision for a New Paradigm in International Relations, a World Health System, and Direct Non-Violent Action in Times of Social Breakdown,” composed by Helga Zepp-LaRouche, and Lyndon LaRouche’s Four Laws are excellent short presentations of that alternate method of warfare employed by the Schiller Institute’s proposed Gideon’s army.

Lyndon LaRouche once said, in his 1983 “The Implications of Beam-Weapon Technology for the Military Doctrine of Argentina”: “It is a poor army which limits its qualifications to mastery of battle tactics. That qualification is indispensable, but deep mastery of philosophy pertaining to warfare is of even greater importance. The necessary philosophy of warfare is necessary for all soldiers; it must be developed to a cutting edge in the officer corps, and above all, prized the more greatly the greater the officer’s responsibility of command. Since the word ‘philosophy’ is usually greatly misinterpreted in these times, let us speak, instead, of wisdom....

“It is essential, in such connections, to examine the content of wisdom on two levels; firstly, a sense of the enduring benefit of an individual’s life, as a practical benefit to mankind, to one society; secondly, the moral significance of the practical benefit.... The first, the practical side of the matter, is necessarily best examined from the vantage point of economic science, the vantage point of Gottfried Leibniz’s, original establishment of economic science, and the elaboration of that science in the form of both the American system of political economy and the governing principles of all of the work of the French military command and Ecole Polytechnique upon the leadership of Lazare Carnot.” LaRouche proposed that the American intelligence services should be organized to reflect this view, and abandon the unprincipled deployment of assassin teams, such as Barack Obama’s weekly drone kill lists, or the multiple layers of anti-Constitutional corruption exemplified by “Vice” President Dick Cheney.

The fact that the assassin in Argentina wore a tattoo at his elbow of the Azov Battalion insignia demonstrates the global significance of our battle to shut down the Ukrainian Center for Countering Disinformation and other “blacklisting” operations, as well as their sponsors in NATO, the United States State Department, and British intelligence, the latter an extension of the City of London and its Wall Street appendage. This next ten-day period, beginning with the September 7 press conference convened by Executive Intelligence Review which has just released the investigative report “Ukraine’s ‘Information Terrorist’ Blacklist: ‘Global NATO’ Issues Hit Order Against Advocates of Peace,” followed by the September 8 all-day celebration of the centennial of the birth of Lyndon LaRouche, and the September 10/11 conference, will allow us to take a major step forward in the civilizational battle.

STRATEGIC WAR DANGER

Russian Official Says Ukrainian Commandos Were Trained by MI6

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—Vladimir Rogov, from the main council of the Zaporizhzhia Region’s military-civilian administration, charged this morning that the Ukrainian special forces deployed for the Sept. 1 early morning assault on the Zaporizhzhia Nuclear Power Plant were trained by the British foreign intelligence agency MI6. “Not only did [they] study English ... but underwent special training under the guidance of the British Secret Intelligence Service, the MI6. After that they returned to Ukraine ... through Warsaw, ending up in Odessa and from there, by the end of August, [they] arrived in the Dnepropetrovsk region, on the right bank of the Dnepr River, where they got ready and moved out to execute the criminal orders given to them,” he said, reported TASS.

On the morning of Sept. 1, the Russian Defense Ministry reported that Ukrainian troops attempted to disembark at 07:00 at the Zaporizhzhia nuclear power plant. The landing was thwarted by Russia’s Armed Forces, which sank two self-propelled barges carrying saboteurs from Nikopol. The Ministry further reported that, at 06:20, the Kiev regime carried out a landing by two Ukrainian sabotage groups of some 60 people on seven speedboats on the coast of the Kakhovka reservoir, 3 km northeast of the ZNPP. Russian National Guard and Armed Forces blocked those saboteurs.

NATO’s CCD Escalates Drive To Target Opponents of War as ‘Infoterrorists’

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—On Sept. 1 and 2, representatives of NATO, the U.S. State Department and other European nations gathered again in Kiev under the auspices of the Ukraine presidency’s National Security and Defense Council (NSDC) and its now-notorious Center for Countering Disinformation (CCD), to accelerate their plans to impose dictatorial thought-control over the globe, in the name of fighting “Russian disinformation.” This is precisely the operation which EIR has demanded be shut down in its just-released dossier, titled “Kiev’s ‘Info Terrorist’ List: ‘Global NATO’ Orders a Hit on Advocates of Peace.”

The occasion was an international roundtable on “Combatting Disinformation in the Conditions of Military Operations.” The CCD reports ambassadors and representatives of 24 countries took part, and named 18 of the participants. Among the names released were those of two “senior experts” from NATO’s Strategic Communications Center, and diplomats and “experts” from the U.S., France, Germany, Sweden, Poland and Canada, as well as the Baltic nations.

Oleksiy Danilov, Secretary of the National Security and Defense Council, and CCD acting head Andriy Shapovalov hosted. Shapovalov set the terms for debate: “Today, our goal is to form an international hub for countering information threats at the national and international level,” he announced. He insisted that international law must recognize “infoterrorism” as a crime, and anyone committing such a crime be declared an “information terrorist” and subjected to measures such as are applied to actual terrorists. “Only in this way will we be able to effectively protect Ukrainians and citizens of partner states from information crimes, in particular, information terrorism,” Shapovalov pronounced, according to the summary reports published by the CCD and the NSDC.

Danilov called the “information front” as important in winning war as fighting on the battlefield. He stated outright that the CCD had been created in preparation for the war they were planning. “We understood in advance that there would be a war; that’s why in March 2021, the Center for Countering Disinformation was created by Presidential Decree,” he said. (A few days earlier, Danilov had reported that Ukraine—and thus its NATO backers—began preparing for war in December 2019.)

The CCD asserted that everyone present agreed, reporting in its release that “the parties emphasized that information terrorism is actually as real as ordinary terrorism and has no less consequences.”

The NSDC reported briefly on what only a few of foreign speakers had said, but that did include remarks by U.S. Embassy Public Relations officer Robert Post who appears gung-ho on the project. “The G7 countries, in particular, the U.S.A., together with the Ukrainian authorities, are actively fighting against Russian propaganda and disinformation,” he stressed.

Canadian Embassy First Secretary Molly Graham described Ottawa’s attempts to control the press, by “ ‘focusing a lot of effort’ on conducting training for journalists on countering disinformation,” because “democratic” countries understand that “propaganda and disinformation” threaten “freedom of thought.”

The head of operations of Sweden’s new Psychological Protection Agency Mikael Tofvesson, was all in, waxing equally Orwellian in his enthusiasm over how “our struggle is aimed at building a free democratic society where there is no place for propaganda and misinformation, but only freedom of speech and pluralism of opinion.”

Various foreign speakers held up Ukraine—where the CCD, among other agencies, is charged with issuing “blacklists” and “hit lists” against any dissidents from the official line—as a model “to the whole world of an effective countermeasure against disinformation.”

NSDC included a release on the remarks of CCD head Andriy Shapovalov, whose name first gained currency when he announced the release on July 14 of CCD’s hit list.

Jacques Baud’s Operation Z Describes How West’s Misinformation Makes War Worse—for Ukraine

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—The Swiss military expert Jacques Baud has just written a new book, Operation Z, out in French on Aug. 30. In a lengthy interview with The Postil Magazine, posted Sept. 1, Baud explains that his book isn’t so much about the Russian special military operation in Ukraine as it is about the West’s information war against its own populations. “The aim of this book is to show how the misinformation propagated by our media has contributed to push Ukraine in the wrong direction,” Baud stated. “I wrote it under the motto ‘from the way we understand crises derives the way we solve them.’ By hiding many aspects of this conflict, the Western media have presented us with a caricatural and artificial image of the situation, which has resulted in the polarization of minds. This has led to a widespread mindset that makes any attempt to negotiate virtually impossible.”

He continues: “The one-sided and biased representation provided by mainstream media is not intended to help us solve the problem, but to promote hatred of Russia. Thus, the exclusion of disabled athletes, cats, even Russian trees from competitions, the dismissal of conductors, the de-platforming of Russian artists, such as Dostoevsky, or even the renaming of paintings aims at excluding the Russian population from society! In France, bank accounts of individuals with Russian-sounding names were even blocked. Social networks Facebook and Twitter have systematically blocked the disclosure of Ukrainian crimes under the pretext of ‘hate speech’ but allow the call for violence against Russians.

“None of these actions had any effect on the conflict, except to stimulate hatred and violence against the Russians in our countries,” Baud argues. “This manipulation is so bad that we would rather see Ukrainians die than to seek a diplomatic solution. As Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham recently said, it is a matter of letting the Ukrainians fight to the last man.”

Baud says that in the course of writing his book, he found that not a single French-language news outlet abided by journalistic standards of quality and ethics set out in the Munich Charter of 1971, “as far as Russia and China are concerned. In fact, they shamelessly support an immoral policy towards Ukraine, described by Andrés Manuel López Obrador, President of Mexico, as ‘We provide the weapons, you provide the corpses!’ ”

Moving on to the military realities, the interviewer asked Baud if assertions in the West that the war has proven that the Russian army is feeble and that its equipment is useless were true. “No,” Baud flatly replied. “After more than six months of war, it can be said that the Russian army is effective and efficient, and that the quality of its command and control far exceeds what we see in the West. But our perception is influenced by a reporting that is focused on the Ukrainian side, and by distortions of reality.”

IAEA Chief Reports on Tour of Zaporizhzhia Nuclear Plant

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—Rafael Grossi, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), told reporters yesterday, after returning to Ukrainian government controlled territory, that the physical integrity of the Zaporizhzhia nuclear power plant had been violated several times and he was worried by the situation there. “[T]his is something that cannot continue to happen,” he said, reported Reuters. He said his experts would stay at the facility and he would continue to worry until the situation had stabilized.

Grossi said he had been able to tour the entire site, seeing key areas such as the emergency systems and control rooms. His team would now need to do a lot of work to finish its analysis of technical aspects. “We are not going anywhere. The IAEA is now there, it is at the plant and it is not moving—it’s going to stay there,” he said. Those experts, he added, would provide what he called an impartial, neutral, technically sound assessment of what was happening on the ground.

Grossi told journalists that the IAEA experts conducted an initial assessment, managed to inspect “quite a lot,” and were planning to continue working at the plant, reported TASS. The residents of Enerhodar, with whom Grossi spoke before leaving the plant, handed him a petition with over 20,000 signatures calling for Ukraine to stop provocations against the plant.

According to the Russians, Ukrainian forces continued shelling the area near the plant even after the IAEA team arrived. “Yesterday, when the IAEA inspectors were staying with a working visit on the premises of the Zaporizhzhia nuclear power plant, Ukrainian forces conducted a strike on a thermal power plant and two strikes on a ferry service located on its premises.... Later on Friday [Sept. 2], after the IAEA inspection had departed ... the city was shelled three times,” said the head of the military-civilian administration of Zaporizhzhia Alexander Volga said, according to TASS in a separate report. “At present, it is quite calm in the city.”

COLLAPSING WESTERN SYSTEM

Assassination Attempt vs Against Argentine Vice President Was Not Domestic, International Neo-Nazi Pattern Emerges

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—An attempted assassination last night of Argentine Vice President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner on the street in front of the apartment building where she lives in the capital of Buenos Aires left the nation in shock. Today, however, it led to unprecedented mass demonstrations of support in the capital—reportedly 1 million people—and in cities around the country. The attempted assassination failed because the would-be assassin, the 35-year-old Fernando Sabag Montiel, born in Brazil but a naturalized Argentine, fired two shots at Fernández’s face at point-blank range, but his 32 caliber Bersa pistol didn’t fire; she would have been killed instantly had it not done so.

President Alberto Fernández gave a nationally-televised speech last night, declaring that the attack on the Vice President was the worst incident to occur in the country since the return of democracy in 1983, an event of “extreme institutional gravity.” There would be no business as usual on Friday, he announced, and the country would effectively shut down so that people could go out on the streets to show their support “in peace and harmony.” The country is now operating in emergency mode.

The temptation for Argentines, and foreign observers alike, is to attribute this event to internal politics. That would be a tragic mistake. Yes, the domestic situation is very volatile. Fernández de Kirchner, a two-time President and tough political leader in her own right, has been in the center of political debate in the past two weeks, after a sleazy prosecutor called for her to be jailed for 12 years and banned from politics for life on trumped-up corruption charges. The mass media and the Buenos Aires city government, run by the right-wing political opposition, have deliberately fed an environment of hostility directed at the Vice President, while her supporters rallied in her defense around the country. Polarization is intense.

There is nothing internal about this case, however. The pattern that is emerging from initial investigations is the same one seen in the mass shooting in Buffalo, New York in May of this year, or in the massacre at a Christchurch, New Zealand mosque in March of 2019, in which the perpetrators were neo-Nazi admirers of Ukraine's Azov Battalion.

The intermittently employed, lumpenized Sabag Montiel was tattooed with the symbols of the Nazi Azov Battalion, the Black Sun (Sonnenrad), the Azov swastika as well as the German Iron Cross. His Facebook page revealed that he admired several neo-Nazi and occult groups, and former friends described him as someone who displayed erratic, irrational behavior, was a fanatic admirer of "death metal" music, was violent, but had also been a victim of bullying and was "often marginalized." A police raid of his apartment discovered a cache of 100 bullets for his Bersa pistol. He had previously been arrested for illegal possession of a weapon.

Messages of support for Fernández de Kirchner have been pouring into the country from around Ibero-America and the Caribbean and the world, from current and former heads of state, political leaders, legislators and others. Joe Biden and Secretary of State Tony Blinken sent personal messages, as did UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres and Pope Francis who spoke with the Vice President by phone.

Boris Johnson Orders Italy, You Can Change Your Government but Not Our Policy for Your Government

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—“In the coming weeks both Mario Draghi and I will be leaving office. But I am confident that our successors will understand what is at stake in Ukraine,” said lame duck British Prime Minister Boris Johnson said in an interview with the daily La Repubblica. BoJo continued, “Because the core values that underpin our peace and security are under threat. We must continue to defend them. At any cost.”

Translated into immediate policy orders: Keep fighting NATO's war against Russia to the last Ukrainian.

Italy has made a tragic experience of what it means to defend British "core values at any cost" over the past 70 years, from the 1962 assassination of ENI industrialist Enrico Mattei, to 1978 kidnap/murder of former Prime Minister Aldo Moro, to the "strategy of tension" (a term created by the British), to the 1992 coup, decided upon at a meeting off the coast of Italy aboard HM royal yacht Britannia, that inaugurated the past 30 years of Italy's national destruction.

BANKERS' ARITHMETIC

G7 and EU Throwing Europeans under the Bus

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—Apparently, the G7 Finance Ministers believe that they can impose not only financial conditionalities on other nations, but "financial exceptionalities" as well. Bloomberg reports the G7 Finance Ministers approved a plan to fix a price cap on Russian oil. Two officials, quoted by the Financial Times, say that the price cap will be effective from Dec. 5 for oil and from Feb. 5 for refined products. U.S. Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen said it is a powerful weapon to fight inflation.

Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov responded by saying that if a price cap is implemented, Russia will simply sell its oil elsewhere.

EU Commission President Ursula von der Leyen was excited by the G7 decision and said it is time for the EU to implement a similar price cap on gas. An extraordinary meeting of EU Energy Ministers will debate this proposal and another one to decouple electricity prices from gas prices on Sept. 9.

Russian Security Council deputy chairman Dmitry Medvedev's reaction was: "There won't be any Russian gas in Europe any more."

While these surrealistic decisions from the G7 and EU are being taken, Gazprom noted that an energy crisis for Europe is guaranteed for the winter. Even if major European countries succeeded in filling gas stocks “close to the maximum level,” this “does not guarantee to go through the autumn-winter season in a reliable way,” wrote Gazprom on its Telegram channel. Germany consumed 57 billion cubic meters of gas from Oct. 1 to March 31 of last year, a monthly consumption of 9.5 bcm. Current stock levels, at 84% of capacity and 18.3 bcm, “are comparable to an average consumption of two months in the winter season,” Gazprom warned.

Italian Economist Proves ‘Green Transition’ Aims To Save the Banks Not the Planet

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—Mario Giaccio, former dean of the Economics Department at the Chieti-Pescara University and former editor of an industry journal in commodity science, exposed the fraud of the so-called green transition in an interview with the Italian daily La Verità on Sept. 1. The interviewer was Franco Battaglia, professor of physical chemistry at the Modena University.

Professor Giaccio exposes the malign EU policy that allocated €30 billion per year to “fight CO2,” subtracting those funds from financing for agriculture. “In this [farming] sector our country will lose almost €400 million and the most punished region will be Apulia, with cuts up to €40 millions. All this, to reduce atmospheric CO2 by 16 parts per billion per year.”

“Curiously, man-made financial chaos is presented as a natural event; climate change, which is a natural event, is attributed to man,” Giaccio says, citing warnings by French President Emmanuel Macron at a 2017. The summit “demanded to redirect financial policy to energy transition,” and proposed “New monetary emissions to fight climate disruptions.”

“At international level, the Green Economy represents an effort to bail out the global financial system from a giant new financial bubble.” Giaccio charged, “Not by chance the Institute of International Finance had characterized the Green Economy as ‘the new gold’ in a Dec. 9, 2019 paper.” The green economy, however, is sustained by government subsidies, without which it would fail: “To understand who runs climate policy, follow the billions and the billionaires. In 2015, the Financial Stability Board of the Bank for International Settlements created the ‘climate task force’ to advise ‘financial investors and insurers on climate-connected risks.’ Members of the task force are the largest world banks, insurance companies, investment funds, large oil, steel, mining, chemical companies representing over $100 trillion capital at global level. The first global index of high-level green bonds was promoted by Goldman Sachs and is financed by the largest global banks and several other companies. The overall amount of capital to be invested is over $600 billion. There is also a European investment fund, Breakthrough Energy,” founded at COP26 by Bill Gates, Ursula von der Leyen, and the European Investment Bank President Werner Hoyer.

The UN 2030 Agenda adopted this policy and “a commitment of a trillion dollars in investments and new wealth for global banks and financial giants, which are the real powers, is demanded. The 2030 agenda has one novelty: After the 1972 Club of Rome, a clear judgment on the unsustainability of the current development model was relaunched, this time not only on the environment level, but also on the economic and social level. It is the update, in an oligarchical financial function, of the ideology already contained in the ‘Our Common Future’ report of the Brundtland Commission in 1987. When the most influential multinationals and the largest institutional investors in the world get together to finance a so-called Green Agenda, one should ask what is behind advertising campaigns that aim at convincing common people to make inexplicable sacrifices to ‘save our planet’—or to save ‘their planet’? That is why you cannot argue against the climate issue, you cannot debate it because it is already deeply embedded in the interests of Big Finance. The truth is that we are not dealing with the trumpeted energy transition but with financial transactions. The aim of climate ideology is not the well-being of the planet and its inhabitants, it is the well-being of Big Finance.”

PANDEMIC COVIDCOVID Infections Set to Spike as Winter Approaches, ‘We Just Don’t Know’ What Will Happen

Sept. 2 (EIRNS)—Health experts are expecting that, as temperatures cool and more people congregate indoors, COVID cases will again increase in the U.S. Although it is believed that mortality and general contagion will likely be lower, due to the large number of Americans having either been infected before or vaccinated, there is a danger of a new explosion of cases. One reason is that the BA.5 variant is extremely contagious, and overtook the previous BA.2 variant as the most prominent form of COVID earlier this summer. BA.5 is so contagious that people are becoming infected again only months after being sick, showing that it can evade prior immunities much faster than other variants. And of course any time a virus has a high mutation and contagion rate, the possibility for mutation to a new and potentially more deadly form increases.

Michael Osterholm, PhD, director of Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota, was quoted in a Sept. 1 report by CNBC that we’ve entered an unprecedented phase of the virus. Previously, infections and deaths have come in waves, surging then declining. But now, we’ve been in a three-month plateau of infections, hospitalizations, and deaths, just as we head into the worst of the cold season. “We’re seeing now more and more people are on their second and third episodes of this,” Osterholm said. “What is the interaction between increasing vaccination, natural infection and immunity related to infection? We just don’t know,” he said. “Will we continue to see this kind of activity maintained for some time? People will say it can’t go on endlessly, because people will be infected and develop immunity. But what happens with waning immunity?” Osterholm asked.
